PERSONAL OBJECTIVE

My professional objective is to be used by God to fulfill His plan and purpose for my life. To date, my unique skill sets center on the development of people - adult education, leadership development, organizational development, ministry, mentoring, teaching, and writing. My approach to people development foundationally involves the Word of God and extends to the co-creation of results-oriented plans to help others accomplish life goals and vision. As a critical thinker and scholarly practitioner, I first expand my own capacity by delving deeper into my own spiritual and personal development as well as expanding my knowledge through research, reading, and writing. By humbly using my extensive background in a breadth of areas, I am able to help others fulfill their life purpose and goals.

RESEARCH INTEREST

Dissertation: “Student and Institutional Variables That Affect Time to Degree Completion of Community College Students”
- Regent University, 2012

I plan to further explore student, institutional, and other variables that reduce time to degree completion of community college and four-year college students. I am also interested in research on the concept of adult mentoring and the development of life navigation skill and self-determination in adults.
